

Tough Questions

You may be asked difficult questions during your interview including those pertaining to gaps in employment, felony records, etc. Here are a few tips for handling these types of questions:

1. Be honest – but use it as a positive and discuss why your life is different now and how you are ready for a career, not just another job
2. If you have a gap in your employment, identify a key skill you may have learned while you were off work and discuss how the experience improved your time management skills or organization skills.
3. If you have a felony record, you may be asked about it during an interview. Be honest and factual and explain that you are in a new place in your life and are committed to doing your best.
4. The goal of answering tough interview questions is to reestablish credibility – Show that each life experience has been a learning experience and has made you a better person today.
5. If a question is NOT asked about an employment gap, felony record or other difficult background issues, there is no reason to bring it up during the interview.
