The early bird gets the worm; but teens are getting too tired

By Chicago Tribune, adapted by Newsela staff
Sept. 26, 2014

CHICAGO — While backpacks only get few hours of sleep most nights, the early school start times, often the school day begins, begin in the dawn, and is consistent of the modern world.

The early start for homework before 10:30 p.m.

"It's probably not the healthiest way to live, but it's the only way to get everything done," said Radkowski, a senior in high school.

The new school year has just started, but students are already sleep-deprived. They aren't getting the 8 to 9 hours of sleep each night they need to grow and learn.

Not Enough Sleep

Last week, an organization of pediatricians — doctors who treat children and young adults — called on schools to start later so students can get more sleep.

Young people not getting enough sleep is "a national public health crisis," according to Robert Owens, a sleep expert at a children's center of research in Washington, D.C.

Write an eye thought, reaction and question as I read.
